Sky Visitors — Part 2

Lion Clouds → Morning Beacon (Oct 4–5, 2025)

After Part 1, the skies thickened and a lion profile appeared — eyes, wide nose bridge, soft mane in the wisps.

Closer look: the features hold — an anchored read for new eyes.

By morning, a warm light glowed across the lot — a continuation marker for the sequence, with other presences near the trees.

Closer look: light threads between branches; other figures appear around the glow for those inclined to look.

Closing Note

This sequence is offered as simple witness. Part 1 was shared, lion clouds arrived soon after, and the morning beacon followed. Public voice remains invitational: readers are welcome to look and decide what they see.
